

Dr. Sam Natapoff has worked with multiple government agencies in five countries in the areas of monetary policy, international trade, investment and business development.

After spending a year in Brussels working in the European Parliament, he worked at the European Central Bank and the German Bundesbank.

He was appointed to the International Trade Administration in the U.S. Department of Commerce during the Clinton Administration, during which time he also worked with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. He also served as a senior consultant to the State of Massachusetts for international trade and investment.

He has published numerous articles on international economic issues, including international monetary policy, technology development and EU institutional development, as well as U.S. domestic politics.

Dr. Natapoff received his B.A./M.A. in Modern History from Balliol College, Oxford University and his Ph.D in political science from the George Washington University in Washington D.C.. He speaks French and German, is married, and currently resides in New York City.